

Pitch Template

A streaming partner like Netflix usually wants a package that makes the show feel real, marketable, and easy to evaluate fast. At minimum, that means a strong logline, a pitch deck or series bible, a sizzle reel or teaser, and clear proof that you have access to the people or world the show is built around.

What to include

- A sharp one-sentence premise that makes the hook obvious immediately.
- A pitch deck or series bible with the tone, format, characters, episode engine, and why the series can sustain multiple episodes or seasons.
- A 3–5 minute sizzle reel that shows actual footage, not just stock, archive, or concept slides, so executives can see the tone and access.
- If it is a scripted show, a pilot script; if it is unscripted, a clear episode outline and format breakdown.
- Visual references, mood board, and any proof of traction, such as audience numbers, prior press, or notable talent attachments.

What the reel should do

The sizzle reel should feel like a trailer, but it needs to show the core story engine, the main characters, and the emotional promise of the series. Netflix-style buyers generally want to see that the idea is bingeable, that the world is unique, and that the show can keep delivering beyond one episode. If it is a doc or reality concept, original footage and real access matter a lot because that proves the project is viable.

What helps get the meeting

A meeting is usually easier to get when the package already feels packaged, meaning there is a trusted production company, sales agent, or partner attached who can vouch for the project. Traction helps too: organic views, festival buzz, talent interest, or a comparable track record can make the pitch more credible. In practice, the package should look less like “an idea” and more like “a show that is already halfway built.”

Simple template

A practical pitch package would be:

1. Logline.
2. Short pitch deck or series bible.
3. Sizzle reel or teaser.
4. Pilot script or episode outline.

5. Talent, access, or traction notes.

For a Netflix-style meeting, the goal is to make the buyer think: this is specific, visually compelling, and ready to develop or buy.

Pitch Elements

Series Bible

Tone, format, characters, episode engine, and why the series sustains multiple episodes, seasons and regional spin-off shows.

League Of Rock | The Show

- Join a band, turn up the volume, and discover the rock star hiding in your basement.
- The untold story of rock'n roll's underdog. A musical journey where strangers are smashed into five bands, and become a global television sensation.
- From first jam to live stage, League Of Rock makes television rock in a whole new way.
- The Rock'n Roll Underdog's Fearless Adventure
- Where strangers are smashed into bands and pro musicians coach. Real challenges ensue, and the winning band hits the stage at a big show.
- Where amateur musicians go from basement to stage at light speed. League Of Rock | The Show is global rock'n roll tv.
- More than a series, League Of Rock | The Show is a loud, unforgettable leap from basement jams to big shows.

This Series Scales Globally

League Of Rock | The Show is a uniquely powerful television franchise. The subject matter is globally universal and adored and embraced by all ages, genders and cultures. League Of Rock is a well-proven, eighteen year success, providing show producers and streamers dramatic risk mitigation.

The show framework gives streamers and broadcasters reliable program outcomes that scale globally... What makes this series's scalability truly special is that the show taps directly into the fabric of the territory it's produced in. For example: League Of Rock | The Show | New York will feature coaches who are professional and famous musicians from NY. The stars of the show are also native to NY. The truly magical element is its local vibe.

The show taps right into the local culture. Viewers enjoy the many musical flavours of the UK, New York, Texas and wherever else the show is produced. Even if a version is produced in Japan, it will thrive on the contemporary bands, rock stars, hosts, participants and live venues in Japan.

The League Of Rock bible tightly guides each franchise to ensure consistency and repeatability, while offering the latitude to embrace local flavours and cultures. This is a reliable, proven turnkey show production system.

Overall Tone

League Of Rock | The Show is the story of the Rock'n Roll Underdog. It is an uplifting, deeply inspirational character-driven, mid-budget reality docu-series with moments of humor, vulnerability, tension, challenge, and genuine payoff. The tone leans heartfelt over sensational. More emotional beats than American Idol. Episodes balance band rehearsal tension, personal backstories, and behind-the-scenes band chemistry and friction, combined with collaboration, survival and drama, ending each episode with a challenge milestone (song selection, band dynamics, rehearsals, and styling) and triumph. The series feels inspirational. It's a joyful celebration of music, community, and collaboration. It shows the world that with a little courage to try something challenging, anything can happen.

Format

- Genre: Deeply cinematic, character-driven reality / docu-series hybrid.
- Episode length: 44–47 minutes (with 22–minute “cut-down” versions for streaming).
- Episode structure: 4–6 acts per episode, including:
 - Personal interviews (casters' backstories and motivations)
 - Weekly challenges (song choice, band dynamics, band style)
 - Coaching sessions with pro touring musicians
 - Rehearsals
 - Performances (in-studio, private show, or small-venue).
 - Cliffhangers (emotional tags into the next episode).
- Season arc: 6–8 episodes per season; Each season follows one “cycle” of participants from audition through to the final big show, where the winner is selected to open for a famous band at an even bigger show.

- Broadcast + streaming: Designed for linear TV with strong streaming-friendly hooks—cast interviews, “Band of the Day” clips, and “Full Show” versions on digital platforms.
-

Characters

The show is built on a core cast of 15–25 music-loving participants which creates between three and five bands, plus recurring coaches and producers. Characters are curated for diversity of age, background, and musical style, united by one rule: no participants are working pro musicians.

- The Participants (Band Members):
 - The Reluctant Rocker: Mid-career adult who “never pursued it” but still dreams of being in a band.
 - The Shy Singer: Confident off-stage, terrified on-mic, pushed to find their voice.
 - The Basement Musician: Plays at home for years but never in front of a crowd.
 - The “Weekend Warrior”: Has played in non-pro jammer bands but never committed fully.
 - The Late-Stage Beginner: Adult learning guitar, bass, or drums for the first time.
 - The Hyper-Enthusiast: Shows up knowing a little, willing to learn a lot.

All are cast into 3–4 bands per season, each with its own chemistry and arc (friendships, friction, and eventual implosion or onstage sensation).

- The Coaches:
 - Lead Coach: One main coaching personality, a seasoned, globally respected producer (Bob Ezrin), serving as the music authority and musical compass.
 - Guest Coaches: Rotating pro touring musicians (guitarists, singers, drummers, bassists, keyboardists and more) who drop in for specific episodes to push skills and tell stories from the road.
Coaches are written as warm, tough-love figures who model the idea that “anybody can learn” rather than “only prodigies belong.”
 - Coach backstories

- The Producers / Host Elements:
 - Host/Narrator (Terry Moshenberg) created the format, has produced hundreds of sessions over 18 years, in multiple cities, knows the coaches and has the secret sauce to assemble the bands. He introduces challenges and recaps arcs.
 - Off-camera producers appear in day-to-day running-room style, reacting to band progress and tensions, and helping with decisions, adds behind the scenes spice and colour. Producer/Host discussions roundup the week and provide highlights for Web Series and Social Media.
-

Episode Engine

Each episode is driven by a golden triangle of tension:

1. Authentic musical challenges and scoring: Learn a new song, master a part, write a simple riff, or adapt to a band-assigned style (e.g., “classic rock,” “indie,” “pop-rock”).
2. Band-dynamics pressure and friction: Egos, uneven skill levels, logistical conflicts (schedules, homes, work), and big-personality clashes.
3. Personal growth: Participants wrestling with self-doubt, fear of failure, or family expectations.

Per-episode beats:

- Cold open: A high-energy or emotional moment from the next episode’s show or rehearsal.
- Act 1: Introduce band(s), challenges, and personalities and back-stories.
- Act 2: Song selection tasks, coach’s enter early rehearsals; first signs of friction or breakthrough.
- Act 3: Midway Workshops are “mini-performances” or in-studio video that tests progress.
- Act 4: A crisis or turning point (quitting, injury, conflict, or a surprise bonding moment).
- Act 5: Final push toward the episode’s musical milestone (finished song, small show, foreshadowing to the big show).
- Tag: A short, intimate interview about what this journey means, teasing the next episode’s stakes.

By the season’s end, each band performs a full live set in front of a real audience, with one song selected as the “season anthem” featured in promos and streaming trailers.

Why the Series Sustains Multiple Seasons

- Scalability
There are many major cities globally, where The Show will expand to. These targeted cities have famous and/or professional musicians living there, a significant instrument-playing population, live venues, rehearsal facilities and instrument retailers. These components enable easy and systematic show production.
- Evergreen casting pool: Mechanism that drives new seasons. Recruitment system, coach recruitment system. How the casting is a reliable system. Anyone who's ever picked up a guitar, sung in the shower, or watched a concert from their living room is a potential participant. Ages can range from late teens to late 50s, producing fresh casts every season, without encountering creative fatigue.
- Repeatable format: The core arc—form bands, train, rehearse, and perform—is simple enough to repeat, but human dynamics and song choices keep it fresh. Different seasons can experiment with themes: “Couples Bands,” “Parents vs. Kids,” “Corporate Bands,” or “Cross-Generational Covers.”
- Built-in emotional hooks: Each participant's story is a mini-documentary: “why I never did this,” “what this show costs me,” “how this changed my life.” These narratives naturally evolve across seasons (returning alumni, follow-up features, or “Where Are They Now?” specials).

Why It Works for Multiple Geographic Regions

The League Of Rock production team has many decades of experience in multiple cities and countries. Scalability for this show is elementary. Each executive has worked with, and maintains direct relationships with top music and television industry players. Bob Ezrin lived in Los Angeles, Nashville, and New York. His production experience spans from Lou Reed to Pink Floyd (The Wall), from Dua Lipa to Meatloaf, over to Bocelli, among so many more, it's too many to mention. Bob's current work in advisory is taking him to Italy, Germany, India and beyond.

Martin Katz brings deep film and television production experience to the project, with more than forty-eight major film and tv credits under his belt, some of which involved several of the biggest names in contemporary music including Elvis Costello and Elton John.

Terry has produced music-based events in many locations globally, and has run League Chapters in four cities. Terry has worked directly with some of the biggest names in rock'n roll, and maintains relationships with a fabulous group of players located in New York, Nashville, the UK and beyond. Some of these include the late Steve Cropper, Earl Slick (David Bowie,) Carlos Alomar (David Bowie), Reeves Gabrels (David Bowie and The Cure), Richie Cannata (Billy Joel) and more.

League Of Rock | The Show is defined as a multi-region television franchise. Scaling the series globally is a natural, planned progression with very little, if no significant friction.

Primary Expansion Regions Include, but are not limited to:

New York

Nashville

Los Angeles

- Universal concept, local flavor: The idea of “ordinary people forming a band” is culturally universal, but each region's show is seeded with local personalities, live venues, coaches and more. A Nashville spinoff could lean into Country Rock, a New York spinoff could spawn a pop-rock-rap influenced show; a UK version could tap into punk-heritage and pub-rock venues.
- Franchise-friendly structure:
 - Each region keeps the same engine (auditions → band formation → coaching → live show → winning band).
 - Spinoffs can swap out coaches, and styles while keeping the emotional beats intact.
 - International versions can cross-pollinate talent (guest coaches, “crossover episodes,” or “Regional Battle” events).
- Lifestyle and business extensions:
 - Country-specific branding (e.g., League Of Rock: Canada, League Of Rock: Texas, League Of Rock: Uk) can benefit from local music scenes, festivals, and venues for marketing and live-event tie-ins.
 - Streaming platforms can cluster spinoffs under one global title, making it easy to binge “all the bands” or compare regional styles.

League Of Rock | The Show is a musical character engine in a stable format that will run for years, season after season, and region after region—each band, each coach, and each audience crowd telling a new version of the same electrifying story: “I never thought I could, and now I’m doing it on stage.”

Everyone on planet earth loves the story of the Underdog.

Season-by-season roadmap and Pitch Deck Outline built on the show's core premise: Non-pro musicians who are strangers, get smashed into bands, they survive the rock'n roll roller coaster, work with pro coaches, and perform live in an authentic music journey format.

Season roadmap

Season 1: Canada — The Original Stage. The first season introduces the format in its most authentic environment, following 15–25 basement musicians as they are drafted into bands, coached by pro's, and compete toward a climactic live performance. Canada is the natural launch point because The League Of Rock was founded in Toronto, with its live shows produced at the world famous El Mocambo. The emphasis is discovery, personal reinvention, and proving the engine works on television, with every episode ending with an authentic musical milestone rather than manufactured elimination drama.

Season 2: Canada — Bigger Stakes. The second season deepens the format with stronger archetypes, higher-caliber coaches, and more ambitious challenges, while keeping the emotional accessibility of ordinary people chasing a music dream. New twists can include alumni cameos, record labels featured artists coaching bands who cover their newly released songs, themed band nights, or genre-specific episodes so the series expands, while still staying grounded in the core promise of strangers smashed together, band formation, coaching, and live performance payoffs.

Season 3: New York or LA — True geographic expansion. NY or LA works as the first regional expansion because the LOR production team already maintains a coaching infrastructure, including a head coach and local support team, which suggests the model is transferable beyond one region. Creatively, NY or LA can lean into a bigger, more international feel, contrasting slightly with Toronto's home town energy, while proving the format scales without losing the show's founding intimacy.

Season 4: UK — League Of Rock Goes Global. The founder and additional production staff have existing relations in the UK music world, including Jim McCarty, founding drummer for the Yard Birds, making the UK a logical first international spinoff and a clear proof point for franchise potential beyond Canada and the US. This season will sharpen the format's export story by blending the same emotional engine with a distinctly local music culture, local venues, and region-specific coaches, showing streaming buyers the format travels cleanly across borders.

Season 5: All-Stars / Regional Showcase. By the fifth cycle, the franchise can reward audience loyalty with a returnee or standout-participant season featuring alumni, fan favorites, or top performers from prior seasons, while still keeping the “ordinary people achieving extraordinary growth” DNA intact. This season also opens the door to special-event programming such as Canada vs. New York, LA vs. UK, or coach-led showcase episodes that turn the series into a global entertainment brand rather than a one-city reality show.

Multi-season engine

The series will sustain because the casting pool is naturally renewable: League Of Rock is built for non-pro musicians who are “stuck in the basement” and want people to jam with, which describes a broad, multi-generational recurring audience-base rather than a niche one-and-done group; this is a never-ending, renewable resource.

The format is also repeatable without feeling stale because each season refreshes through new personalities, new band chemistry, new song choices, new coaches, and new local scenes, while the core structure remains familiar and easy for audiences to follow.

Another advantage is operational sustainability: The League already has a network of coordinators, coaches, gear techs, venues, and rehearsal facilities, which means the show is supported by an existing real-world ecosystem rather than a purely invented TV premise. That built-in infrastructure lowers friction for future seasons and makes regional spinoffs more credible to broadcasters, streamers, and production partners.

Regional spinoffs

The format is especially strong for geographic expansion because the emotional hook is universal but the music culture is local, so each region can keep the same bones while changing its flavor through venues, coaches, genres, accents, and audience identity. Canada can feel intimate and aspirational, New York can feel flashy and super cool, and the UK can lean into international vibes, giving each version a distinct tone while preserving the same franchise promise.

From a business standpoint, the website already points to Toronto, Ottawa, and the UK as part of the League’s footprint, which supports the argument that the concept is not hypothetical but already operating across multiple regions. That makes the series unusually well-positioned for a scalable unscripted franchise with domestic adaptations, international licensing, branded live events, and cross-region specials.

Pitch deck outline

1. Title slide — League Of Rock | The Show: “From Basement to Stage”; include the strongest logline and franchise positioning as a premium uplifting music reality format.
2. Series logline — The rock’n roll underdog’s fearless adventure. A musical journey where strangers are smashed into bands, and the show becomes a global television sensation.
3. The promise — Why this is more than a competition show: it’s the story of transformation, built on courage, community, and live music payoff.
4. Why now — Audiences respond to authentic, hopeful, unscripted formats, music-driven storytelling, and real human reinvention; this show sits at the intersection of all three, anchored by a real-world program operating in multiple regions for over thirteen years.
5. Format — Episode length, season length, band-building structure, coach system, and finale design.
6. Tone — Inspirational, uplifting, emotional, funny, aspirational, and authentic rather than mean-spirited or elimination-heavy.
7. Characters — Participant archetypes, coach roles, and the kinds of personal stories that recur each season.
8. Episode engine — How each episode generates story through music challenge, band dynamics, and personal growth.
9. Season roadmap — Canada launch, expansion seasons, New York, LA, UK and an All-Stars franchise growth path.
10. Why it lasts — Renewable, multi-generational cast pool, repeatable format, built-in emotional stakes, proven, long standing experience, real infrastructure, knowledge, and support.
11. Regional spinoffs — Why the format localizes cleanly and scales internationally, using Toronto, New York, LA, UK as proof points.
12. Extensions — Digital clips, performance specials, soundtrack releases, live events, branded partnerships with lifestyle brands and record labels, and community activation.
13. Audience — Music lovers, aspirational adults, families, and viewers who love transformation reality with real skill-building.

14. Why buy — League Of Rock | The Show is a hopeful, music-driven reality franchise with a clear emotional engine, built-in expansion, and a real-world program already in place. It offers a scalable, export-friendly format that can anchor a network's unscripted slate and travel into multiple seasons and regions.
- 3-4 minute and 8 minute version done.
 - Unscripted, clear episode outline and format breakdown.
 - Proof of traction, such as audience numbers, prior press
 - Thirteen years running
 - Four cities
 - Three thousand participants
 - Hundreds of recording sessions
 - Hundreds of shows
 - Ten thousand+ social followers
 - Notable talent attachments.
 - Bob Ezrin - Executive Producer
 - Alan Frew - Executive Producer

Positioning

League Of Rock | The Show is a premium feel-good reality franchise where everyday music lovers stop dreaming from the sidelines, join a real band, and fight for the kind of live performance they never thought they could pull off.

This is the irresistible story of the Underdog.

A second supporting line could be: It's part transformation story, part band boot camp, and part crowd-pleasing music event, with a format already rooted in Toronto, Ottawa, Vancouver, and Montreal, with thirteen years of running experience.

Why the show sustains multiple seasons

- Renewable casting pool: The show is built for non-pro musicians who feel “stuck in the basement,” a broad, evergreen demographic.
 - Repeatable structure: Band formation, coaching, rehearsal, and live performance can be refreshed with new people, genres, venues, and mentors each season.
 - Real infrastructure: The League's existing coaching, venues, rehearsal spaces, and gear network make the format feel authentic and sustainable, not invented solely for TV.
-

Why it works for regional spinoffs

- Universal hook, local flavor: The emotional core of “ordinary people forming a band” travels well, while each city can inject its own genres, accents, and venues to keep the show fresh.
 - Proven cities: Toronto, Ottawa, and the UK already form a built-in proof-point cluster that demonstrates the show can scale inside Canada and beyond.
 - Franchise logic: Each regional version can live under the same League Of Rock | The Show banner, with cross-pollination opportunities (crossover episodes, mentor swaps, “Battle of the Cities” events).
-

Show Scoring & Challenges

Show Scoring and Sponsored Challenges

Each episode has a challenge woven into the narrative. Challenges focus primarily on the process of creating or improving the band's music performance, dynamics, arrangements, style, or stage craft.

Weekly challenges are the facility used to score bands weekly. The scoring system provides bands with real world tasks, and gives viewers a scope on what bands really need to address in the process of building a successful band. Each episode wraps up with a Challenge Winner. The winning band receives prizes each week for their win in that week's challenge category. Below is a brief list of challenges and when they might appear in the episode roll-out.

Challenges are sponsored by global brands, in and outside of music and lifestyle. Each week, the sponsoring brand is invited to appear in the episode, help host the challenge, and present the prize to the winning band.

S1E1 LOR | Meet The Crew | Sponsor: Music Lifestyle Brand

Crew Round Table telling stories. Cut in legacy footage, foreshadowing some of the band mates, dig into the cultural aspects, interviews of LOR Alumni. Round table discussion with Terry and Neil telling stories, describing the culture and the characters. In the next episode...

S1E2 | LOR | Auditions & Submission Tapes Review | Sponsor: Instrument Retailer

During the auditions, players and singers show up with instruments, personal mics, and other tech. The sponsor can provide new and better gear and auditioners are offered free use.

S1E3 | The Draft Kick-Off | Sponsor: Instrument Maker

Every scene in the show always has the coolest gear hanging on walls, sitting on stands, etc. During the kick-off event, the sponsor is invited to bring some the most beautiful gear and players/singers are invited to use the gear during the season and onward.

S1E4 | LOR | 1st Rehearsal | Sponsor: Energy Drink

The first rehearsal is always the hardest. Just getting through it is enough of a challenge. In the first rehearsal bands are challenged with selecting at least one song and defining the type of band they're going to go forward as. They must also collectively select a charity they'll donate to when challenges are won. The winning band of this weeks challenge takes home sponsor goods and a donation is made to their charity of choice by the sponsor.

S1E5 | LOR | 2nd Rehearsal | Clothing & Lifestyle Brand

In episode two bands are furiously working to establish a sound, a look and vibe. The challenge this week focuses on bands work ethic, how they relate and collaborate, and coaches are scoring them accordingly. The sponsor this week is a global lifestyle brand and clothing/accessories are on full display. No two bands will have the same look and the winning band receives a fabulous cache of choice gear. Also, the sponsor provides a generous donation to the bands charity of choice.

Recap episode 4.

Terry does the first draft alone. Coaches join him and argue out the second draft. They come together on the final Band Breakdowns. Five newly minted League Of Rock Bands are fully baked. In the next episode.